Conference Outline

Both individuals and groups in local urban settings have been impacted by global economic forces, international regulations, and flows of capital and people. The global financial crisis has also created scenarios that directly bear on urban research methods and theory. For example, in Europe, the local effects of the crisis have been exacerbated by the imposition of the Maastricht parameters among most of the countries that have adopted the Euro. There as elsewhere, such as in the USA, the crisis has dramatically impacted on neighbourhoods, provoking catastrophic housing and job losses and, as a by-product, setting in motion dynamic urban social processes such as the relatively peaceful “Occupy Wall Street” movement as well as bloody street demonstrations in Greece.

By and large, governments have failed to constructively meet the complex challenges posed by these global phenomena, thus raising critical issues of both legitimacy and legitimation. The current crisis has apparently established the supremacy of economics over politics. Comparative ethnographic analyses can document in detail local effects of this crisis such as unemployment, informal employment, foreclosures, homelessness, bankruptcy, suicide and crime. It can also bring to light how local cultures are coping with this situation.

Urban Anthropologists and other Social Scientists have studied in depth the empirical realities of the widening gap between the distribution of rights and access to them, and the attendant processes of societal inclusion and exclusion. A major task of this Conference will be to reflect on how this affects ordinary people. Urban ethnographers have demonstrated the moral and cultural complexity of individual action, highlighting the social value of individual and local community action.

Through ethnographically-based analyses, this Conference will bring together 20 to 30 scholars to explore these complex issues in Western and non-Western settings, Specifically, the Conference will discuss how legal, semi-legal and illegal actions draw on community resources to defy global and state power. Ethnographically-based analysis has an important contribution to make to our understanding of how all institutions in urban neighbourhoods are changing as a result of the global financial crisis and that these transformations demonstrate the complex effects of economic decline.
